DISABILITIES, PLEASURES, AND SEXUALITIES

Despite facing numerous obstacles to sexuality, sexual expression, and parenting, individuals with disabilities have consistently showcased resilience, agency, and creativity. This volume seeks to highlight and celebrate these qualities by inviting contributions that challenge stereotypes, reimagine expressions of sexuality, illuminate aspects of reproduction and parenting, and explore different forms of intimate relationships. The goal is to foster a rich dialogue around the themes of activism, agency, pleasure, desire, and the dynamics of parenting and family life within the context of disability and sexuality.

Abstracts should be 500-1000 words, submitted as a Word doc or PDF.

Submission deadline: October 15, 2024

SPECIAL ISSUE: JOURNAL OF QUEER AND TRANS STUDIES IN EDUCATION

Call for Proposals

The editors of this special issue of JQTSIE, titled “Loud, proud, rooted, and resisting: Activism and advocacy in tough times,” are seeking paper proposals. This special issue will bring together research on activism and resistance by people in and around K-12 schools who are responding to an increasingly virulent backlash against LGBTQ+ people being present and visible in public education, whether in the United States, in Canada, or around the world, and from a transnational and intersectional perspective.
